The event, hosted by WKRN's Neil Orne and Bobby Johnson, included performances by Neal McCoy, Tyler Farr, Lee Greenwood, The Malpass Brothers, Andy Griggs, Craig Campbell, Jenna LaMaster, John Morgan, Duke Henry, Robert Bacon, along with a surprise "OOM PAW PA MOW MOW" performance of "Elvira" by Richard Sterban of The Oak Ridge Boys. "I can't thank all the artists, managers, sponsors, and fans that came out to support what Daryle loved so much – traditional country music," says Holly

Singletary. "Each year, it seems that more and more people learn about what we are doing in Daryle's honor and want to help. This can only continue with everyone's support. Next year, we have already set the date for February 11th at the Nashville Palace, so I hope everyone plans to come out!"

About Daryle Singletary:

Daryle Singletary rose to fame in the 90s with a string of successful hardcore country albums. From rural Georgia, where his father was a postmaster, Singletary moved to Nashville in 1990 to pursue a music career full-time. After catching the eye and ear of his musical hero, Randy Travis, Singletary released his debut record, the self-titled Daryle Singletary (1995), which produced four Billboard Hot Country charting singles, including the smash hit "I Let Her Lie," which topped out at No. 2 on the charts. Additional hits included the 1996 single "Too Much Fun" and 1997's "Amen Kind of Love." Other hit albums include 1998's top-20 album, "Ain't It the Truth," and a pair of albums featuring some of Singletary's favorite country songs, "That's Why I Sing This Way" (2002) and "Straight From the Heart" (2009). His last album, 'There's Still A Little Country Left,' was released in 2015. In 2018, Singletary died at age 46 from a blood clot.
